Caesarstone presents: ice by Tom Dixon

Caesarstone is proud to present the first instalment of its collaboration with Tom Dixon launching the 2016 year long Designer Programme. The series will span multiple locations, commencing at the Interior Design Show Toronto, continuing to Milan in April for Milan Design Week and followed by other locations in North America, Europe and Asia.

The Toronto Ice Kitchen is inspired by Canada's impressive frozen lakes and the formidable icebreakers that clear the way for freighters during the winter. Powering their way through the ice, they leave behind a frozen mix of jagged pieces in a spectacular array of whites and greys. A series of large monolithic triangular prisms in different sizes and heights form the base of the ice kitchen creating food prep areas, serving stations, surfaces and stools.

The Toronto Ice Kitchen is the first of four semi-professional kitchens inspired by the elements of Ice, Fire, Earth and Air. The concept celebrates local heroic foods from chosen cities worldwide. The four kitchens will create theatres of food and cooking that demonstrate the hard wearing qualities and design of Caesarstone.

For each installation, Tom Dixon will be using a secondary material that will form part of the element's narrative and allow him to present Caesarstone in extraordinary and new ways. For Toronto, Dixon has chosen an aluminium extrusion system developed for flat pack housing, delivering a cold industrial aesthetic whilst acting as the structural support and lighting rig where Dixon's Melt Lights complement the ice theme.
